Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

The historic district encompasses the single and multiple family residential area and religious buildings historically serviced by a series of streetcar lines and enclosed by commercial development and arterial roads. The historic district is along the north edge of the Wallingford neighborhood's commercial corridor along N and NE 45th Streets. Interstate 5 (completed through Seattle in 1965, with 5th Avenue NE used as the boundary) marks the east edge. Stone Way N (with Interlake Avenue N behind the commercial development used as the boundary) marks the west edge. The east-west arterials N and NE 50th Streets define the north edge, separating this historic district from plats and circulation to the north oriented towards Green Lake.

Underlying plats, recorded between 1888 and 1922, provide the organizational framework for roads, blocks, and lots and convey development influences shaping the spatial character of the historic district. Plat names reflect an early development association to both Lake Union to the south and the University of Washington campus to the east.

Volunteers from Historic Wallingford undertook the field work in 2020 and 2021, background research, and database development to identify building styles, alterations, status of secondary buildings, building classification, and digitally photographed most of the buildings. Volunteers transcribed census enumeration district sheets from 1910, 1920, 1930, and 1940 to better understand the socio-economic condition of the historic district through past building occupants. Volunteers conducted additional individual building research using Polk City Directories, property tax and side sewer cards.

The historic district consists predominately of one-and-a-half-story (1.5) single family buildings. There are high numbers of one- and two-story buildings, with only a few two-and-a-half- and three-story single-family buildings. Multiple family apartments are mostly three stories, with some one to two and a half stories. Religious buildings are two to three stories. The one mixed-use commercial building is two stories.

Most buildings within the historic district function as single family residences. There have been some conversions of single family dwellings to multiple family both within and outside of the period of significance. Purpose built multiple family buildings comprise a slightly larger number of buildings than the single to multi conversions. Religious and commercial buildings comprise only a small portion of building use within the historic district.

There are 13 architectural styles represented within the historic district, of which 10 apply to buildings built within the period of significance. The styles used during the period of significance span the Late Victorian (Queen Anne), Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals (Colonial, Classical, and Tudor Revivals) and the Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movement (Prairie School, Craftsman) periods.

The most common style occurring within the period of significance is Craftsman, followed by Classical Revival, Colonial and Dutch Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival. The following table conveys the styles of buildings built within the period of significance. Styles occurring outside of the period of significance include Minimal Traditional (9 buildings), Modern (15 buildings), and Neo-Tudor (1 building).

Integrity

The historic district exhibits a moderate-high level of integrity showcasing buildings constructed in a variety of styles within the period of significance.

The location remains intact, with no history of relocating streets. Most houses in the west portion span multiple lots with houses in the east portion typically built within a single lot. Apartments, the mixed-use commercial building, and religious facilities span multiple lots. The size and shape of blocks remains intact.

Lots experienced changes both during and outside of the period of significance. Within the Lake Union 2nd Addition, the originally north south orientation of lots along Meridian, Woodlawn, and Wallingford, and Burke were adjusted by ca. 1906 based on extant buildings to face these north-south avenues rather than the east-west streets. Multiple lots have been combined for larger apartment buildings.

Some shifts in the original plats occurred during the period of significance, and include block 1 in Smith's University Addition, recorded in 1908 as single lots then subdivided into double lots by 1909. Similarly, lot orientations in Hope Addition, recorded in 1922, were implemented ca. 1921 in a north-south orientation rather than east-west.

Recent high-density development has subdivided and merged lots.

The design remains largely intact and communicates the interrelated development pattern of historic contributing buildings and the underlying plats. The arrangement and hierarchy of streets and arrangement of blocks remain intact. The spatial organization of the plats and the differences in development influences based on periods platted remains evident through the street and block sizes, near absence of alleys, and the use of garages. The sidewalks, driveway curb cuts, and planting strips remain to communicate the residential character. The buildings retain a moderate-high level of integrity with multiple architectural styles and building forms communicating patterns of development and prevailing preferences evident in the historic contributing buildings. The pattern of single and multiple family, as well as religious facility, development remains evident.

The setting around the historic district has changed with the growth of the neighborhood's commercial corridor along N and NE 45th Streets transitioning single family buildings to commercial use and replacing them with low-rise commercial buildings. Commercial development along Stone Way N replaced single family dwellings along the street.

Within the historic district, the setting retains a moderately-high level of integrity. Landscape character is consistent with early 20th century residential subdivisions, with sidewalks, planting strips, street trees, small front and larger rear yards, and building setbacks from the street. Infill construction within the historic district does not diminish the integrity such that the original setting is no longer evident.

The historic district retains integrity of materials. Buildings, roadway, sidewalks, street trees, and curbing remain. Most buildings retain key exterior cladding and window materials related to their original construction. These materials are readily evident when walking through the historic district and contribute to distinguishing development from the period of significance.

The original workmanship within the historic district remains largely intact and is evident in the design and quality of the buildings.

The historic district retains a remarkable historic feeling. When walking or driving down the streets, the street trees and houses fronting the street retain a moderately high level of integrity and define the visual character of the streetscape. The main architectural styles utilized in the historic district remain evident through the historic contributing buildings to provide a cohesive identity.

The district retains integrity of association as the plats remain in continued majority residential use and continue to anchor the core development area associated with the growth of Wallingford. The organizational framework established by the plats and the buildings convey the period when they achieved importance and continue to reflect design principles that shaped them.

Narrative Description

Setting

Wallingford is included within the ancestral land of the dx^wdəwʔabš, the Duwamish Tribe. The historic district is located within Seattle, north of downtown and Lake Union, west of the University of Washington, and south of Green Lake. The historic district resides within the north-central portion of the Wallingford neighborhood. N and NE 50th Street bound the historic district's north edge, with 5th Avenue NE the east edge along Interstate 5. The south edge is the back (north) side of commercial development along N and NE 45th Street. Interlake Avenue N (a former streetcar line route) marks the west edge of the historic district, behind (east of) the commercial development along Stone Way N. Adjacent neighborhoods consists of the University District to the east, Fremont and Phinney Ridge to the west, and Green Lake to the north.

The historic district encompasses the single and multiple family residential area and associated religious buildings historically served by a series of streetcar lines and enclosed by commercial development and arterial roads. The Home of the Good Shepherd (built 1906, listed 1976, Smithsonian No. KI00148, 4649 Sunnyside Avenue N, 11.5 acres) is the only previously listed National Register of Historic Places property within the historic district.

The historic district slopes gradually downward from a central high point. The high point, at 310 feet in elevation, is the grade around the Home of Good Shepherd building. Except for a short, steep section between Burke Avenue N and Wallingford Avenue N, the grade in the west half of the historic district slopes gradually downward to the west reaching an elevation of 210 feet at the outer edge of the historic district. Grade in the east half slopes gradually to the southeast reaching an elevation of 225 feet at the southeast corner of the historic district. There is a steeper section that extends diagonally from the south boundary along Eastern Avenue N, east along NE 47th Street, and north along 4th Avenue NE.

Plats

The following plats establish the distinct, underlying organizational framework for roads, blocks, and lots within the historic district. These plats, located at the then north edge of the city, benefited from proximity to the streetcar line along Interlake Avenue N at the west edge of the historic district, along with the Meridian Line a half block south of the district along N and NE 45th Street, as well as proximity to places of employment. Their distinguishing characteristics reflect the multiple development influences shaping the spatial character of the historic district, and the transitional role of the 1891 Baltimore Addition between the west and east platting patterns. All utilize a grid layout. Collectively they convey shifts in density through lot sizes and a change in circulation patterns to connect with neighborhood arterials to support the use of automobiles through changes in block orientation (north-south versus east-west) and the use of rounded block ends at arterial connections.

		neighborhood. Continues the 60-foot road widths, 80-foot width of N 46th Street, and street names (different from existing) established by the 1887 Woodland Addition to Salmon Bay City to the west of this addition and shaped the street widths characteristic of the west half of the historic district. In contrast to the 80-foot width of N 46th Street, the main commercial corridor, N and NE 45 Streets, was platted at a width of only 70-feet. Establishes the 200- by 300-foot block sizes without alleys and lot orientation fronting the east-west streets that is characteristic of the west half of the historic district. Utilizes larger 50- by 100-foot lots within the historic district. Single family dwellings typically occupy a single lot.
Lake Union 2nd Addition	1889	Continues road and block widths, lot orientation, street names, and absence of alleys established in the Porterfield's Addition rather than following the alignment of the 1883 Lake Union Addition to the south. Establishes smaller 25-foot lot widths for a higher lot density that is a defining characteristic of the west and central portions of the historic district. Utilized longer 300-foot outer block lengths, with shorter inner 250-foot blocks. Single and multiple family dwellings typically span two or more lots.
Baltimore Addition	1891	Continues the north-south block orientation that extend inland from Lake Union and are characteristic of the central and south portions of the Wallingford and Fremont neighborhoods, and the University District. Shifts the alignment of N 46th Street north and reduced the right of way width to 66 feet. Continues the denser 25-foot lot widths and absence of alleys of the Lake Union 2nd Addition. Introduces the change in block orientation that set the pattern for platting of the historic district's east portion. This change utilizes longer (387 feet) and slightly narrower (228 feet) blocks oriented lengthwise north/south with fewer cross streets versus the sizes and east/west orientations of blocks in the Porterfield's and Lake Union 2nd Additions. Single and multiple family dwellings typically span two or more lots.
University Hill Tracts	1905	Introduces the use of curved block corners within the historic district to accommodate automobile traffic flow transitioning from NE 46th to NE 47th Street (reflecting the street's east-west circulation role despite the reduction in width and alignment change introduced by the Baltimore Addition) and from Thackeray Place NE to NE 50th Street (reflecting the arterial role of NE 50th Street versus the commercial corridor role of NE 45th Street). Introduces the narrower (204-foot) and longer (600-foot) blocks characteristic of the east portion of the historic district. Establishes north-south pedestrian and vehicular circulation

University Hill Tract 2nd Division	1906	Continues the block, lot, and street sizes as University Hill Tracts, absence of alleys, and included rounded corners at streets connecting to NE 50th Street.
Daniels University Grove	1907	Continued the block, lot, and street sizes as the University Hill Tracts. Introduced the use of alleys, separating residential lots from the larger commercial lots along NE 45th Street and bisecting the length of the easternmost block.
Smith's University Addition	1908	Continues the block, lot, and street sizes as the University Hill Tracts. Shifts the alignment of Eastern Avenue N slightly west to fit a wider block on the east side that was platted as full width lots but subdivided by 1909 into double lots without an alley. This layout also allowed 1st Avenue NE to widen to a 40-foot right of way. Utilizes alleys (12 and 15 foot wide) as buffers along the south (from the Baltimore Addition) and west (from the future Hope Addition). Single family dwellings typically span only one lot.
Hope Addition	1922	Platted by The Good Shepherd of Seattle, with Sister M. Emiliana and Sister M. Helen, President and Secretary of the corporation. Continues the block, lot, and street sizes as the University Hill Tracts. Shifts lots at the north end, platted originally to front Sunnyside Avenue N, to front N 50th Street by ca. 1921 based on existing buildings. Utilizes an alley as a buffer along the south from the Baltimore Addition. Single family dwellings typically span only one lot.

Streets and Sidewalks

Streets within the plats remain at the widths established in the plats and are paved with concrete and have concrete curbs. Parallel parking extends along both sides of most streets. Driveway curb cuts provide access to basement and detached garages (located both to the front and to the side of buildings).

Planting strip widths vary by plat and generally increased in width with the more recent plats. Planting strips consist of a plantable area within the public right of way between the street curb and sidewalk, which based on historic aerials and existing planting strips, tends to consist of lawn, street trees, and small ornamental plantings (shrubs, annuals, and perennials) reflecting property owner preferences. The two west plats, Porterfield’s and Lake Union 2nd Addition have 7-foot-wide strips along most streets except for 4-foot-wide strips along the N 50th Street arterial. The Baltimore Addition has 8-foot-wide strips. The two easternmost plats, University Hill Tract 2nd Division and Daniel’s University Grove, along 4th and 5th Avenues NE and NE 47th Street (including within the University Hill Tracts), retain 9-foot-wide planting strips. The north/south avenues within the University Hill Tracts, as well as Latona Avenue NE within the easternmost two plats have 10- to 11-foot-wide strips. The Smith’s University and Hope Additions both have 12-foot-wide planting strips. This width extends south along Sunnyside Avenue NE into the Baltimore Addition.

Alleys

Alleys occur only within the east portion of the historic district and with limited usage. All are paved with concrete and provide access to some garages. The 1907 Daniel’s University Grove introduced the use of alleys (14 feet wide), separating residential from the larger commercial lots along NE 45th Street and bisecting the length of the easternmost block. The 1908 Smith’s University Addition utilizes alleys (12 and 15 foot wide) as buffers along the south (from the Baltimore Addition) and west (from the future Hope Addition). The 1922 Hope Addition utilizes an alley as a buffer from the Baltimore Addition to the south

Trees

Street trees within the planting strips are a characteristic visual feature within the historic district contributing to the spatial character of the residential setting. Substantial tree canopies are evident in 1929 historic aerials supporting the early role of street trees as a visual feature within the historic district. There is not a specific genus characteristic of the historic district, nor was a comprehensive planting effort by developers or residents identified. Within the historic district there are over 780 extant street trees as of 2021.

The following represent the most common genera of the over 20 represented within the historic district. Each genus listed below includes multiple species. Size references refer to trunk diameter measured at chest height and are small (10-inches or less), medium (11-22 inches), and large (over 22 inches, typically under 45 inches).¹ Collectively the genera listed in the table below comprise about 60-percent of the street trees and are distributed throughout the historic district. These dominant genera reflect an overall deciduous character providing shade in the summer and light in the winter along with seasonal color changes. The larger genera (acer, Carpinus) typically are long-lived maturing into substantial canopies. The other genera being more mid to small-sized in structure reflect the wide-spread use of flowering trees as a visual feature within the neighborhood.

and city-wide trends at the time of construction, in addition to adaptations to the socio-economic conditions of building owners and the targeted middle-income homebuyer. Buildings built within the period of significance for the historic district reflect the characteristics of the Late Victorian (Queen Anne), Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals (Colonial, Classical, and Tudor Revivals), and the Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movement (Prairie School, Craftsman) styles.

The high volume of buildings designed in the Craftsman style shapes the visual characteristics of the historic district. Classical Revival, Colonial Revival (inclusive Dutch Colonial Revival), and Tudor Revival hold a secondary role in shaping the architectural character of the historic district.

Buildings identified as not having a style were not designed per a specific style but may exhibit influences from one or more styles or be vernacular in its development to support a specific function rather than a specific style. Houses identified as having no style may also have been so significantly altered that cladding, window, and/or plan changes have obscured or removed original stylistic elements.

Classical Revival

The Classical Revival style with 106 extant buildings built in this style is the second most common style used within the historic district. The style came into use within the historic district as part of the first buildings built and peaked in use between 1906 and 1912. A brief burst followed in 1915 with use of the style ceasing in use 1924 except for an outlier use in 1930.

Classical Revival is a transitional architectural style popular during the early decades of the 20th century, incorporating Classical details on bungalows, foursquares, and workingman's foursquares.² These classical details include cornice or eave returns, classical columns or pillars, and modillions. Classical Revival houses may lack the symmetry that is typically seen on Colonial Revival buildings. Good examples include: 1710 N 47th Street (built ca. 1912), 4540 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1912), and 2120 N 46th Street (built ca. 1911).

Collegiate Gothic

The Collegiate Gothic style is the institutional/educational counterpart to the domestic architectural style of Tudor Revival and was used on only one building within the historic district, St. Benedict School (built ca. 1924) at 1707 N 49th Street. Collegiate Gothic got its start in the U.S. in the mid-1800s as Gothic Revival and was utilized on both religious and institutional buildings. It soon became a popular architectural style for university campuses and was employed on buildings erected at Boston College, Yale, Duke, and Princeton. Charles D. Maginnis' design of Gasson Hall (1908) at Boston College was published in 1909. His design was well-received and helped launch Collegiate Gothic as a dominant architecture style for educational buildings for the next several decades.³

Colonial Revival

The Colonial Revival style was moderately used within the historic district with 51 extant buildings built in the style. Use of the style within the historic district started by 1910, but was not consistent in popularity, with 1 to 3 buildings built in a year followed by zero use of the style for a couple of years, then another 1 to 3 buildings built in the style. Use of the style peaked between 1919 and 1925 with the highest number built (12) in 1924.

Colonial Revival has been a popular architectural style in the United States, particularly on residential buildings. Colonial Revival houses imitate, but do not directly copy, the Federal- and Georgian-style buildings constructed during the United States' early years. Colonial Revival houses typically feature symmetrical main facades, double-hung windows, side gabled or hipped roofs, cornices with dentils or modillions, and prominent front entrances that may feature sidelights, fanlights, pediments, and columned porches or porticos.⁴ Colonial Revival houses may be two to two and a half stories or may be single-story bungalows. Good examples include: 4611 Burke Avenue N (built ca. 1927), 1821 N 50th Street (built ca. 1926), and 4533 Latona Avenue N (built ca. 1921).

Craftsman

The Craftsman style is the most common style used within the historic district with 305 extant buildings built using the style. The first large scale use of the style occurred in 1905 with 16 buildings completed in the style. Following a brief drop over the next two years, the style then peaked in use between 1909 and 1916. Following another brief lull, the style returned to popularity between 1918 and 1922. Use of the style, based on extant buildings, tapered off to just one building built per year in the late 1920s and by 1929 was no longer in use.

The Craftsman style is the first major architectural style movement that originated on the West Coast. California architects Charles and Henry Greene are credited with popularizing the style in the beginning of the 20th century, and it dominated residential architecture from 1905 until the 1930s throughout the country. The Craftsman style embraced the idea that design should suggest the labor of a master craftsman, so design elements associated with it are often derived from structural elements of the building. This style relies heavily on showing exposed framing and bracing, heaviness of design elements such as box posts, low-pitched roofs, and asymmetrical facades. Wood is the primary exterior cladding material, with river cobble, stone, or brick utilized on porch supports and chimneys.⁵ The popularity of the Craftsman and its associated bungalow form spread—both locally and nationally—with the publication of plan books like Jud Yoho's Craftsman Bungalows (1916). Good examples include: 4903 Burke Avenue N (built ca. 1925), 4517 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1925), 1905 N 47th Street (built ca. 1922), and 4616 Meridian Avenue N (built ca. 1911).

Dutch Colonial Revival

The Dutch Colonial Revival style, a subtype of Colonial Revival was used on 28 extant buildings within the historic district. Based on extant buildings, use of the style within the historic district started by 1905 and continued as 1 to 2 buildings built in the style every couple of years. Use of the style peaked between 1920 and 1923 with 18 built and then ceased in use after 1924.

The Dutch Colonial Revival style draws on late eighteenth and early nineteenth century Dutch Colonial architecture from former Dutch colonies on the East Coast.⁶ In practice within the historic district, the style generally applies to a Colonial Revival style buildings with a gambrel roof. Wood is the primary exterior cladding material, with multi-lite double hung windows. Dormers are typically gabled or shed roofed. Good examples include: 1426 N 47th Street (built ca. 1905), 4524 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1912), and 1722 N 46th Street (built ca. 1921).

Free Classic

The Free Classic style, a subtype of the Queen Anne style, was used on 15 extant buildings within the historic district. The oldest extant building exhibiting the style was built ca. 1905. The style gained popularity between 1906 and 1909, with 10 extant buildings built. The style ceased in use based on extant buildings within the historic district after 1921.

The Queen Anne Free Classic style incorporates classical details into the Queen Anne style. Queen Anne houses are typically characterized by steeply pitched roofs of irregular shapes, often with a prominent front-facing gable, patterned shingles, and asymmetrical facades. Free Classic houses typically feature classical columns on their front porches, rather than spindle work or turned balusters. Other classical details incorporated on Free Classic houses are Palladian windows, cornice-line dentils, swags, and garlands. Like Classical Revival, this style is transitional, bridging the gap between the more ornate Queen Anne houses with the Colonial Revivals increased in popularity in residential construction by the 1920s. Free Classic examples include: 4558 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1921), 4604 Meridian Avenue N (built ca. 1906), and 4520 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1916).

Neo-Classical

The Neo-Classical style was used on only 2 extant buildings within the historic district. These consist of the 4649 Sunnyside Avenue N (built ca. 1906), and the 4722 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1909) buildings.

The Neo-Classical style remained in use nationally from 1895 through the 1950s. The classical theme of the 1893 World's Columbia Exposition supported a renewed interest in Early Classical Revival and Greek Revival styles and utilizing buildings designed for the exposition as inspiration the use and reinterpretation of classical design elements. The style is characterized by a full-height front porch with classical columns. They may also feature a broken pediment over the front door and a roof-line balustrade.⁷ Neo-Classical houses are much grander, in both scale and ornamentation, than Colonial Revival houses.⁸ The front facade is typically symmetrical in composition with a central entrance and surrounding windows with a hip or gabled roof. Windows are double hung, typically multiple-lite over a single lite lower sash. Examples within the historic district relate to the style's first period of popularity, from ca. 1900 to ca. 1920 utilizing correctly designed classical columns and elaborate cornice treatments at the roofline.⁹

Prairie

The Prairie Style saw limited use on buildings within the historic district, with only four extant buildings built in the style. These consist of the 4549 Thackeray Place NE (built ca. 1906), the 4554 Latona Avenue NE and 4700 Wallingford Avenue N (built ca. 1917), and the 4754 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1921) buildings.

The Prairie Style of architecture is indigenous to the United States, developed by a group of Chicago architects. Architect Frank Lloyd Wright's early work is Prairie Style. Prairie Style houses typically feature low-pitched roofs with wide overhanging eaves, two stories, and decorative elements which emphasize horizontal lines.¹⁰

Queen Anne

The Queen Anne style was used on only one extant building (1603 N 48th Street, built ca. 1901) within the historic district as builders favored the Free Classic subset. The style is characterized by complex and asymmetrical rooflines, incorporating hips and gables as well as towers and other irregularities. Asymmetry continues on the elevations, with projecting gables, isolated or compound projecting bays, some cantilevering (especially at the bays), and rich, highly stylized detail in all elements of trim work. Porches are almost always included, and many wrap around two or more elevations. The overall massing is quite heavy, although this is usually somewhat offset by the intricacy of the detailing. Queen Anne architecture often incorporated mixed materials in siding. Queen Anne houses are typically large, two- or two-and-a-half-story residences, but smaller one-story cottages are not uncommon. The overall trend in Queen Anne stylistic design was that it simplified over time; the earliest examples tend to be the most elaborate while later examples were plainer and representative of the Free Classic subset.

Tudor Revival

The Tudor Revival style was used on 29 extant buildings within the historic district. Based on extant buildings, use of the style started by 1906 and continued with 1 to 2 buildings built in the style every couple of years. Use of the style peaked between 1925 and 1929, with some additional buildings completed in 1930, 1932, and 1936.

The Tudor Revival style loosely interprets the decorative elements of the Jacobean and Elizabethan buildings of the of late Medieval period in England and typically feature a dominant cross-gable on the front facade, steeply pitched roofs, decorative half-timbering, tall narrow windows (often grouped), and massive chimneys. Gable details, patterned brickwork, and round or Tudor arches are also hallmarks of this style.¹¹ Tudor Revival is a variation of Eclectic Revival; other variations include the Swiss Chalet Revival, Mission Revival, and Spanish Eclectic. Good examples include: 1921 N 48th Street (built ca. 1932), 1422 N 49th Street (built ca. 1923), and 1925 N 50th Street (built ca. 1936).

Residential Development

Single and multiple family residential buildings comprise a defining characteristic of the historic district reflecting architectural styles and kit houses popular in the Pacific Northwest during the first decades of the twentieth century. The building forms, styles, and associated garages convey the pattern of development and density associated with a period of intense growth in the city of Seattle.

Single Family

Characteristic of the different platting periods, house placement relative to underlying lots differs between the older 1880s and 1890s plats and those recorded in the 1900s. Houses in the older plats in the west and central portion of the historic district span multiple lots while houses in the east portion typically reside within a single lot. House setbacks throughout the historic district ranges from less than 10-feet to just over 20-feet from the front property line. Setback amounts frequently vary slightly within blocks.

Single family house conversions to multiple family dwellings both within and outside the period of significance provide an important mechanism for increasing density within the historic district. Census records from 1910 through 1940 indicate conversions within the period of significance started between 1910 and 1920, increasing households to two or more for multiple houses within the historic district. Examples include 4533 Eastern Avenue N (built ca. 1906) and functioning as multifamily by the 1940 census; and 4554 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1917), multifamily by the 1930 census.

Houses throughout the historic district orient towards the street with a narrow front yard and modest to large back yards depending on house size. Houses are typically centered within their respective parcel(s) or placed with a 5-foot set back between adjacent buildings characteristic of a denser urban setting.

Due to the near absence of alleys, garages occur both in front of and behind houses. Front garages occur at lots with minimal to no back yards, are typically single vehicle and concrete in construction with flat roofs. Curb cuts and a short driveway crossing the sidewalk provide access. Garages behind houses are typically accessed via long driveways from the street, except in the rare instances of alley access, and of wood frame construction with mostly gable or hipped roofs.

Building design and materials predominately reflect the characteristics of the late 19th and 20th Century Revival (Classical Revival), or the early use of Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movement (Craftsman) styles. The frequency of use of the Classical Revival and Craftsman architectural styles characterize this period. The rising popularity of the Craftsman style, as evident in buildings within the neighborhood during this period, and often coupled with the bungalow form, rose significantly in use during the 1910s.

Building forms are single family and include more affordable and efficiently built forms such as workingman's foursquare, American Foursquare, or bungalow. The single-family forms relate to the prevailing styles employed in the neighborhood during the period of significance, national and city-wide housing trends, and the role of middle-income home buyers in purchasing houses within the historic district.

The American Foursquare or Foursquare became popular in residential construction in the early 20th century. Foursquare houses are large, boxy, two-story houses. They have hipped roofs and may have broad eaves. They typically have a symmetrical primary facade, but the entrance may be centered or off to one side. Porches—partial-width, full-width, or wraparound—are also key elements of the form. Foursquare houses may have ornamentation that reflects an architectural style. Good examples include: 4701 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1909), 4700 Wallingford Avenue N (built ca. 1917), and 4540 Latona Avenue NE (built ca. 1912).

A smaller, one-story version of the Foursquare is known as the Workingman's Foursquare. These houses have a hipped, usually pyramidal, roof. They are boxy and compact and usually have a symmetrical primary facade. They often have a front porch, which may be full-width or partial-width. They rarely have additional stylistic elements, reflecting their economical cost. Good examples include: 4513 2nd Avenue NE (built ca. 1909), 1906 N 49th Street (built ca. 1916), and 4532 2nd Avenue NE (built ca. 1903).

The bungalow was a popular housing form in the United States beginning in the early 1900s. These houses were small, compact, and affordable, opening home ownership to a wider segment of the population. The form continued in popularity through the 1920s and even into the early 1930s. Bungalows can range in style from Craftsman and Colonial Revival to Mission Revival, with even Tudor Revival examples. They are typically one to one-and-a-half stories and have gable or hipped roofs. Gable roof forms include the side gable, front gable, cross gable, or double or triple front facing gable roofs. Bungalow examples include: 4655 Eastern Avenue N (built ca. 1915), and 1812 N 48th Street (built ca. 1914).

Building sizes are modest, with nearly half being one and a half stories with a compact to modest plan size. The next most frequent heights are one and two stories. There are only a few buildings that are two and a half stories in height and one that is three stories. Most houses have a 24- to 28-foot-wide front facade, which on a 40-foot wide allowed for at least a 5 to 6-foot set back at the sides from the property line. Plan depths ranged from 30 to over 45 feet resulting generally in a 900- to 1200-square-foot first floor plan.

Building materials are primarily wood, with wood frame construction, wood windows, siding (clapboard, shingles, tongue and groove board), trim (where existed originally, including water tables, window casings/sills, corner boards, barge boards, and cornice elements), and porch and stoop elements (railings, posts, flooring). Brick and stucco are less common and mostly seen on chimneys. Alterations have introduced aluminum, asbestos, vinyl, and cement fiber board siding, as well as vinyl windows.

Multiple Family

Multiple family buildings within the historic district are generally located behind (north) of the commercial core along N and NE 45th Street with recent multiple family buildings also extending along Interlake Avenue N. Building forms include low-rise apartment blocks, courtyard apartment, fourplex, and a mixed-use commercial building. Refer to Single Family above for single-family dwellings converted to multiple family use.

The larger apartment blocks, courtyard apartment, and mixed-use buildings span multiple lots with duplexes and fourplexes typically residing within a single lot. Building setbacks throughout the historic district range from less than 10 feet to just over 20 feet from the front property line. Setback amounts frequently vary slightly within blocks.

The five low-rise apartment blocks within the historic district are apartment buildings two to three stories tall with a single, primary entrance for tenants and guests. They are built out to or near the lot lines and span multiple lots and oriented towards the street. Each unit typically has its own kitchen and bathroom, with units accessed from interior corridors. The main entry and lobby are often highlighted with a high level of ornamentation that is in line with the overall architectural style of the building. Most of these buildings have their own dedicated automobile garage located behind the building. They occur near the main commercial arterial along N and NE 45th Street. These buildings reflect a moderate to high level of investment and were a popular multiple family building form prior to World War II.¹² Examples include 4515 Burke Avenue N (built ca. 1928), 1603 N 46th Street (built ca. 1926), and 1911 N 46th Street (built ca. 1929).

Building design and materials reflect the characteristics of the early use of Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movement (Tudor Revival) styles. The exclusive use of the Tudor Revival architectural style characterizes this building form and age of construction within the historic district. The popularity of the Tudor Revival style, as evident in buildings, rose significantly in use during the late 1920s.

Building materials are wood frame with brick veneer with some stucco cladding, wood windows, and wood stoop elements (entrances, surrounds). Alterations have introduced some vinyl and aluminum windows.

The courtyard type apartment within the historic district, unlike the low-rise apartment blocks, does not have interior corridors. The apartment consists of two one and a half story buildings arranged around a courtyard with eight living units per building, each with their own kitchen and bathroom. Entrances are individual with shared double return stairwells. Each unit has front door access and a back door to the central courtyard and parking. The individuality of each entrance is emphasized by a hood. Garages are separate and located behind the buildings. The buildings have an L-shape plan, span multiple lots and are set back 10 feet from the property line similar to surrounding single family dwellings.¹³ A central driveway between the two buildings provides access to the courtyard and two 7-car parking garages. Examples include 1701 (built ca. 1930) and 1715 (built ca. 1929) N 48th Street.

Building design and materials reflect the characteristics of the early use of Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movement (Tudor Revival) styles. The use of the Tudor Revival architectural style characterizes this building form and the rising popularity of the Tudor Revival style, as evident in buildings, rose significantly in use during the late 1920s.

Building materials are wood frame with brick veneer with some stucco cladding, leaded lite wood windows, and wood stoop elements (entrances, surrounds).

The duplex (flat) building within the historic district is two stories with separate entrances for each of the two-story single-family living units. The single example is 4546 4th Avenue NE (built ca. 1923). The building exhibits the same physical features and spatial placement (setback, lot placement) as single-family dwellings within the historic district.

Religious Development

The single religious facility built within the period of significance is the St. Benedict School (built ca. 1924). Although a nonresidential resource, the religious facility reflected the growing density with the historic district capable of supporting the school.

This building is separate from and unrelated to the individually National Register-listed Home of Good Shepherd (built 1906, listed 1976). Two subsequent waves of religious facility construction within the historic district but outside of the period of significance followed in the 1950s and the 1960s.

Explanation of Contributing and Noncontributing Resources

Overall, the historic district has a moderately high level of historic integrity.

- Historic contributing buildings are those built within the period of significance that retain integrity and convey the historical associations for which the historic district is historically significant.
- Historic noncontributing are those buildings that are 50-years or older but have experienced substantial alterations to their exterior visual character or were built outside of the period of significance.
- Non-historic, noncontributing are those buildings that are less than 50-years of age and built outside of the period of significance.

In assessing buildings, the plan, cladding, and windows are the key elements to convey integrity of design, materials, and workmanship. This assessment occurred from the public right of way since the visual character evident when walking or driving along the streets is the measure of the integrity of feeling within the historic district. Generally, if two of the three key elements had been extensively altered, then the building was found to be noncontributing, unless there was another factor such as a unique design or historical association that remained intact.

The primary character-defining features evaluated on each building were windows, cladding (including trim and detailing), and plan (encompassing the full building envelope) based on what was visible from the public right of way.

“Contributing” was assigned if the windows, cladding, and plan remain intact; or have slight or moderate changes but the building exhibits a high level of design, and/or quality of construction or notable form. Buildings in this category could have a mix of intact/slight/moderate alterations, but no more than one extensive alteration. If a property had an extensive and moderate or two moderate alterations but the third element remained intact, then the overall level of design, form, and quality of construction were factored into the assignment of contributing or noncontributing.

“Noncontributing” was assigned if there are two or more extensive changes to windows, cladding, or plan. Noncontributing was also assigned if enough moderate changes to windows, cladding, or plan, obscured the property’s historic visual character.

The following guiding principles were used for windows, cladding, and plan to gauge the level of impact a change has on building integrity.

Windows:

- Intact: no visible changes to windows and exterior trim.
- Slight: most visible windows and trim remain intact.
- Moderate: most visible windows have been replaced, but at least one original window remains, and all window openings retain their original trim; or all windows have been replaced but the replacements are generally compatible and all openings retain their original trim. Replacing double hung windows (single or multi-lite) with 1:1 windows (vinyl, wood, or clad) rather than horizontal sliders. Most visible windows remain intact, but all the original trim has been replaced.
- Extensive: all the visible windows have been replaced and replacements are not compatible.

Cladding:

- Intact: no visible changes.
- Slight: majority of visible cladding remains intact.
- Moderate: most visible cladding has been altered but some original cladding remains, and/or replacement cladding is compatible.
- Extensive: all visible cladding has been altered, and the replacement cladding is not compatible.

Plan:

- Intact: no visible changes.
- Slight: rear addition set below the roof line, such as a back deck or shed roof extension.
- Moderate: side addition(s), set back from front; rear addition projecting slightly above the roof line; or a front porch enclosure. Generally, the original building form and massing remains legible and is not overwhelmed by the addition(s).
- Extensive: front addition(s), side addition(s) towards front of house; rear addition that is larger than the original building such that the original building form and massing is no longer legible from the public right of way.

Secondary detached buildings that are substantial in size and scale, predominately garages, were evaluated as part of each property since they are functionally related. Attached garages were evaluated as part of the house and not treated as a separate detached structure. Garages were identified as contributing if they retained their plan, garage door opening (the door could have been replaced), and some original cladding materials. Flat roof garages with added railings for rooftop decks were considered contributing as the essential form and function remained legible.

Statement of Historical Significance

The Wallingford-Meridian Streetcar Historic District is significant under National Register Criteria A and C at the local level of significance in the areas of Architecture and Community Planning and Development, for the period of 1900 to 1936, beginning with the construction date of the oldest extant property within the district (4532 Corliss Avenue N, built ca. 1900) and ends in 1936, the last year streetcars were the only public transit form serving the district. Streetcar lines accessing the district began to switch to motorized buses and trackless trolleys beginning in 1937; a transition completed throughout the city by 1944. The historic district is significant as a “Streetcar Suburb” under the multiple property listing “Historic Residential Suburbs in the United States, 1830—1960.” The district is a residential neighborhood of contiguous residential subdivisions that are interrelated by their cohesive design. The majority of the properties constructed within the district were built after the arrival of the streetcar lines in the area and were in fact advertised for their proximity to public transit. The street features (e.g. street widths, lack of alleys), mix of popular architectural styles, predominance of kit houses, and the clustering of apartment buildings on blocks closest to transit lines and the business district reflect this subtype of suburb.

The historic district meets the registration requirements for the Streetcar Suburb under the “Historic Residential Suburbs in the United States, 1830—1960” with its retention of the aforementioned physical features of a streetcar suburb. The district is significant under Criterion A as a Streetcar Suburb in the area of significance of Community Planning and Development as it represents residential development in Seattle spurred largely by population growth and located on then less expensive, land outside the city center through the construction and use of streetcar lines. The historic district is significant under Criterion C as a Streetcar Suburb in the area of significance of Architecture as the district reflects a period of intense growth in the city of Seattle and contains a wide variety of architectural styles and kit houses popular in the Pacific Northwest during the first decades of the twentieth century.

Historical Background

The historic district is located within Seattle’s Wallingford neighborhood. This neighborhood is located on a hill overlooking the north shores of Lake Union and is roughly bounded by Interstate 5 to east, Lake Union to the south, Stone Way N and Aurora Avenue N to the west, and N 50th and N and NE 56th streets to the north. Like the historic district, Wallingford has largely been shaped by transportation connections due in part to its location between key early communities on the north side of Seattle—Ballard to the west and the University of Washington to the east—and close to north-south routes connecting downtown Seattle with cities, and later its own suburbs, to the north.

The area that would become Wallingford was largely wooded until the late nineteenth century, when development began primarily along the northern shores of Lake Union. The northern shore of the lake was cleared of timber by 1887, with many of the hills north of the lake cleared by 1890.^{xiv} Non-industrial development (i.e. residences and commercial buildings) extended north from the lake, but still within close proximity to the shoreline. Edgewater and Latona, small communities, emerged near the northern shores of the lake, particularly after the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern Railroad connected the north shore of the lake to communities to the west and downtown via a trestle bridge in 1887. A large area north of the city, inclusive what would become Wallingford, was incorporated within the City of Seattle in 1891. This annexation initiated a significant amount of platting activity between Lake Union and Green Lake although development did not immediately follow. By 1890 until 1900, the area becoming Wallingford was considered quite affordable in comparison to prices in Queen Anne and Capitol Hill neighborhoods. A 1900 advertisement of real estate for sale indicated an entire block of 20 lots in the historic district’s Lake Union 2nd Addition were priced at $1,200

while two lots in Queen Anne were listed for $1,100, and three lots near 20th Avenue and E Madison Street on Capitol Hill were listed as “cheap” for $750.^{xv}

Streetcar line development in and through the area, following early plats, stimulated additional platting and the actual residential and commercial development within the plats. Real estate prices also increased with streetcar access. Development in the early 1900s only increased as the University of Washington campus to the east of Wallingford was selected as the location for a world’s fair in 1909, the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. Industrial development along the northern shores of Lake Union also pushed residential development further north as the Seattle Gas Light Company established its Lake Union facility in 1906 and a canal was dredged connecting Lake Washington, Lake Union, and Puget Sound beginning in 1911. During the 1910s, as the full channel was opened for ship traffic in 1917 reshaping development along the neighborhood’s south edge, residential development in the historic district reached peak levels.

The name “Wallingford Hill” for the area appeared in real estate advertisements in The Seattle Times and The Seattle Post-Intelligencer by 1908 as the Wallingford Avenue streetcar line was complete.^{xvi} By 1912, the Wallingford name for the neighborhood gained traction as it was used to brand two area churches: Wallingford Church (1414 N 42nd Street) and Wallingford Hill Baptist Mission (1929 N 45th Street). Prior to this point, “Wallingford” only appeared in city directories as a surname or a street address. In 1913, a newly constructed joint fire and police station at the southwest corner of N 45th Street and Densmore Avenue N, was named Wallingford Fire and Police Station (NRHP listed in 1983).

Seattle’s population boomed in the 1920s and residential construction responded with the volume of construction within the historic district nearly reaching the level of the 1910s. Wallingford experienced a significant continued effort to infill its plats during this period. Apartment construction, providing density to the growing neighborhood, also occurred during this period, with many three- to four-story apartment blocks constructed near streetcar lines. Commercial construction also fleshed out key commercial corridors in the neighborhood, including N and NE 45th Street, Stone Way N, and the corner of N 40th Street and Wallingford Avenue N, a key transfer point, just south of the historic district, between the Wallingford and Meridian streetcar lines.^{xvii}

Wallingford has weathered changes over the last century—the removal of the streetcar lines in favor of motorized bus routes, industrial changes and remediation along Lake Union, and the effects of post-war suburbanization. The neighborhood has rebounded through revitalization and significant investment in the last 50 years.

Lake Union-University Hill Historic District

Within the larger Wallingford neighborhood, the Lake Union-University Hill Historic District is a residential area located immediately north of Wallingford’s primary commercial corridor, N and NE 45th Street. The oldest property in the district was constructed in 1900 and most of the buildings in the district were constructed prior to 1923, when Seattle adopted a new and sweeping zoning ordinance codifying use rather than construction quality.

Development in the district can largely be divided into four development periods: 1900-1936, 1937-1956, 1957-1985, and 1986-present. The period between 1900 and 1936 is the district’s period of significance and represents the district’s initial construction and establishment as a streetcar suburb in Seattle. The 1937-1956 period had limited development, but reflects key transportation changes affecting the neighborhood and the impacts of the automobile. Between 1957 and 1985, the Wallingford neighborhood’s population decreased, resulting in the shuttering or reorganization of neighborhood schools. After significance rehabilitation efforts to key institutions in the neighborhood, the population decline was reversed, and Wallingford continued as a thriving residential area in Seattle.

Streetcar and Suburban Development, 1900-1936

This period reflects the first intensive wave of development in the district, building off the extensive platting that occurred in the Wallingford neighborhood. Key contributors to the growth of the district included the establishment and construction of neighborhood schools and transportation routes as well as the 1909 world's fair hosted at the University of Washington campus to the east—the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (AYPE).

Although much of the Wallingford neighborhood was platted between the 1880s and 1890s, the area remained sparsely developed the further north from the shores of Lake Union one traveled. Porterfield's Addition (1888), Lake Union 2nd Addition (1889), and the Baltimore Addition (1891) were the plats located within the district by 1900. By 1901 the Green Lake streetcar line extended north from downtown and Lake Union and looped around Green Lake. This line jogged to the east along N 45th Street to run north along Interlake Avenue N, the historic district's west edge.^{xviii} Real estate classifieds in The Seattle Daily Times advertised lots in the Lake Union 2nd Addition for their proximity to the new Green Lake line.^{xix} According to a 1905 Baist's Real Estate atlas of the area, there were approximately 72 buildings existing in the area bounded by N and NE 45th Street to the south, Interlake Avenue N to the west, N and NE 50th Street to the north, and 5th Avenue N to the east.^{xx} Development at the turn of the century was still predominately located along the northern shores of Lake Union and close to the University of Washington campus to the east. Although portions of this area were platted in the 1880s and 1890s, larger, undivided acreages still remained. E. Brown retained 13 acres; E. L. Nichol, 5 acres; the W. P. Boyd Estate retained adjoining 10 acre and 20 acre parcels; and A. Schmidt, 10 acres. A new primary school was constructed in Wallingford, just a half block from the district's southern boundary, in 1904—Interlake School, providing a school further north and west than the Latona School at 5th Avenue N and N 42nd Street.

Between 1905 and 1910, the number of buildings within the district more than doubled. Four plats were filed in the district in the course of four years on the eastern half of the district: University Hill Tracts (1905), University Hill Tracts 2nd Division (1906), Daniels' University Grove (1907), and Smiths University Addition (1908). The University Hill Tracts and University Hill Tracts 2nd Division—which encompassed the former W. P. Boyd Estate—were sold by Norman Bruen and Charles Best of the University Investment Company, who advertised the lots for their low price, views towards Lake Union and the University of Washington, and proximity to the university campus. Daniels' University Grove, sold by Leonard Daniels, advertised its lots as fronting the newly completed N and NE 45th Street streetcar line, within walking distance of the university, and within close proximity to multiple schools. Smith's University Addition encompassed the 5 acres previously owned by E. L. Nichol. These new plats, plus the establishment of neighborhood amenities and improvements, spurred on residential construction in the neighborhood.

In addition to the residences constructed, the Home of the Good Shepherd was established in 1907 with a campus between Meridian Avenue N and Sunnyside Avenue N and N 47th Street and N 50th Street—on acreage formerly owned by E. Brown.^{xxi} The Home of the Good Shepherd was operated by sisters of the Good Shepherd Order and provided shelter, education, and guidance to young girls.^{xxii} They also operated a commercial laundry to generate revenue. St. Benedict Parish was founded in the area in 1906 and began meeting in the district in 1907 when the basement of their building at the northwest corner of N 49th Street and Wallingford Avenue was completed.^{xxiii} Lincoln High School was also a boon to the neighborhood when it opened in 1907, located at N 44th Street and Interlake Avenue N.

The selection of Seattle for the 1909 World's Fair set in motion citywide improvements in preparation. Wallingford received many of these improvements, including grading, curbing, and sidewalks for Bagley, Corliss, Sunnyside, Eastern, and Meridian avenues between 1907 and 1909. The completion of streetcar lines connecting the district with other neighborhoods spurred development in order to supplement the existing Green Lake Line along Interlake Avenue N.

The Meridian Line with service through Wallingford began in July 1908. Streetcar line tracks were laid east along N and NE 45th Street from Meridian Avenue N to the University District in 1907 and by 1908 connected with the Wallingford Avenue Line along Wallingford Avenue N. The Meridian Line was extended in 1909 to run north along Meridian Avenue N to N 56th Street and then north along Latona Avenue Ne to NE 65th Street.^{xxiv} The Wallingford Avenue Line of the Seattle Electric Company also began service in January 1907. The Wallingford Avenue line ran south through the neighborhood and then west along the north edge of Lake Union to connect with neighborhoods to the west and downtown Seattle. By 1911 an extension of the line ran east from Wallingford Avenue N along N and NE 40th Street towards the University District.^{xxv}

In 1910, when the U.S. Federal Census was taken, there were just over 200 residences within the district. Of these 203 residences, 23% were rentals while 72% were owner-occupied (5% did not have information).^{xxvi} In the same year, the Wallingford Commercial Club was founded to promote Wallingford businesses, particularly along its emerging commercial corridor on N and NE 45th Street.^{xxvii} The district was largely white and U.S.- or European-born. The 1910 census demonstrated the broad range of occupations held by residents within the district. Commerce was the main area of employment and included office workers, salespeople, professionals (accountants, architects, engineers), and specialty business (auto garages, bakers, tailors, and butchers). Industry in 1910 consisted mostly of trades people (painters, carpenters, brick layers) as well as people working in extraction (logging or mining) and manufacturing. Other occupational fields were represented within the district, including government (fire/postal/police workers), education (teachers), religious, funerary, defense, healthcare, recreation and culture, and subsistence workers.

The boosterism and civic and infrastructure improvements appeared successful as the district's population and density increased over the next decade. The Fremont drawbridge (NRHP listed in 1982) opened in 1916; although west of the growing Wallingford neighborhood, it provided access to downtown Seattle. By 1920, the district had grown significantly, both in population and the number of residential buildings (472 buildings). The rental to owner-occupied ratio of the residences in the district remained very similar to that from 1910. Of the 472 residences, 22% were rentals and 77.5% were owner-occupied (roughly .5% did not have information). The same range of occupations were represented within the district in 1920 and the neighborhood remained largely white and of Euro-American descent.

In the midst of the historic district's growth, the City of Seattle established the Seattle Zoning Commission, via Ordinance 40407 in 1920. The commission began surveying the city to report to City Council on a recommended zoning or districting ordinance. Prior to this survey, there were a series of building ordinances that predominately focused on fire prevention and established "classes" of buildings, based on construction materials and techniques. The city was divided into building districts, which outlined which classes of buildings (not use) were allowed in each district. After the Zoning Commission completed their survey, City Council adopted Ordinance 45382 (i.e. the Zoning Ordinance) in 1923, which divided the city into districts and rather than just focusing on building materials, began also regulating the use, heights, and size of buildings, and restricting the location of trades and industries.^{xxviii} The 1923 Zoning Ordinance largely documented existing uses. Over 75-percent of the historic district was constructed in or prior to 1923 when Ordinance 45382 was adopted to regulate, restrict, and limit building uses, sizes, and locations. The land within the historic district was classified as within a First Residence zone with the exception of the Home of the Good Shepherd, which was classified as a Second Residence zone. First Residence districts allowed the following uses:

- Single family dwellings
- Public schools
- Private schools – i.e., schools with prescribed courses of study given and graded in a manner similar to public schools or are of a higher degree
- Churches
- Parks and playgrounds (including park buildings)
- Art gallery or library building
- Private conservatories for plants or flowers
- Railroad and shelter stations

The significant buildout of the Wallingford neighborhood by the mid-1920s was noted in The Seattle Daily Times on October 25, 1925. Property values skyrocketed in 1925, with business property along N and NE 45th Street, at the south edge of the historic district, valued at roughly $50 a front foot in early 1925 with a five-fold increase to $250 a front foot by the end of October 1925.^{xxix} The historic district's location within Wallingford on the main east–west thoroughfare between Ballard and Fremont to the west and the University District to the east as well as adjoining the North Trunk Highway (now Aurora Avenue) to the west made it and the larger Wallingford neighborhood an ideal location for new construction in the quickly growing city. The article further states that the neighborhood, inclusive the historic district, was “rapidly reaching the point of saturation—that is virtually every available building lot is occupied by a home. It is the home center of the metropolis.”^{xxx}

News coverage also highlighted the recent zoning ordinance, stating that no hotels or apartment houses existed in the neighborhood outside of the one-half block commercial zones along Wallingford Avenue N between N 34th and N 45th streets and along N 45th Street between Stone Way N and 1st Avenue NE. Despite this advertising, apartment houses and hotels did exist within the neighborhood as many pre-dated the 1923 Zoning Ordinance. But the Wallingford Commercial Club began to petition the Zoning Commission to rezone part of the neighborhood to allow for additional apartment home construction in blocks adjacent to N and NE 45th Street to continue to grow the community. Apartment buildings within the historic district adjacent N 45th Street, as well as the courtyard apartments along N 48th Street were built between 1925 and 1929 and attributed to this effort to support increased density adjacent the commercial core. The community also petitioned for additional access to downtown, seeking construction of a high bridge, rather than another draw bridge, over the ship canal.

By 1930, most of the available lots in the historic district had been built out. Streetlights lit portions of the neighborhood and it was a thriving residential area in the city. A Seattle Times article noted in 1925 that “virtually every available building lot is occupied by a home” in Wallingford and that it was “the home center of the metropolis.”^{xxxi} The Wallingford neighborhood, inclusive the historic district, had a population of over 50,000. The efforts of the Commercial Club (and other neighborhoods, politicians, and business owners) for a high bridge connection with downtown came to fruition in the 1930s. Work began on the Aurora Avenue Bridge (officially named the George Washington Memorial Bridge) in 1929 after a route over the ship canal was selected. In the midst of bridge construction, Seattle City Council adopted an ordinance in June 1930 approving an extension of the Aurora Avenue speedway/highway through Woodland Park. The Aurora Bridge opened to auto traffic in February 1932 and the highway in 1933.^{xxxii}

The completion of the speedway along the west edge of Wallingford made the neighborhood more physically accessible, however, it spurred a shift in transportation away from the streetcars that had shaped the early development of both Wallingford and the historic district. Highway access to the neighborhood, along with the steady increase in personal automobile ownership and use, altered the landscape of the neighborhood and led to the decline and, ultimately, cessation of streetcar traffic to and through the district and neighborhood.

In the midst of these transportation changes and the nationwide Great Depression, the historic district had an over 10-percent increase in the number of rental households, from 22-percent of houses in the district occupied by renters in 1920 to 33-percent in 1930. This contrasts with the city-wide rental rate of just under 50% of dwelling units occupied by renters.^{xxxiii} The U.S. Government had been encouraging home ownership to middle class families for years, but it still remained out of financial reach for most urban and working-class families and individuals as banks often required a 50-percent down payment, interest only payments, and repayment in full after 5-7 years.^{xxxiv} Under President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation (HOLC) was established in 1933, which purchased mortgages on the brink of foreclosure and issued new mortgages with longer repayment schedules that were also amortized (i.e. payments included both principal and interest). The HOLC had lower interest rates and required borrowers to maintain regular payment schedules, so the HOLC was naturally concerned about the risk of borrowers defaulting on their loans. The HOLC incorporated an appraisal process in its lending practices, requiring an assessment of the houses, condition of the surrounding neighborhood, and neighborhood demographics, including race. They created color-coded (or redlined) maps, or residential security maps, to demonstrate the "risk" associated with loans in particular neighborhoods. Higher risk levels corresponded with areas having greater numbers of people of color and lower incomes.

Congress then passed the National Housing Act of 1934, establishing the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) which insured bank mortgages. The FHA continued the exclusionary practices of the HOLC in its appraisal process. According to Richard Rothstein in his book The Color of Law, "The FHA judged that properties would probably be too risky for insurance if they were in racially mixed neighborhoods or even in white neighborhoods near black ones that might possibly integrate in the future."^{xxxv} These practices encouraged real estate agents, developers, and residents to write racially restrictive covenants to prevent their neighborhoods from being "redlined."^{xxxvi} Although it does not appear there were any formal restrictive covenants in the historic district, it is clear that de facto segregation was at play in Wallingford. Few if any individuals of color resided within the boundaries of the district and the Wallingford area received a "B" or "still desirable" ranking on the 1936 residential security map and was described as follows:

The residents are practically 100% American of moderate means, with annual incomes of $1500 to $3000. The homes are both modern and seem-modern in type, with a sprinkling of old-style residents. The district is predominately residential in character and densely settled. It is a very popular district to desirable tenants and the permanent type of home owners. The residences are being maintained in from fair to good conditions.^{xxxvii}

From Streetcar to Automobile Suburb, 1937-1955

The popularity of the automobile was apparent by the mid-1930s as the once ubiquitous streetcar lines began to be replaced by bus lines. Development around and within the historic district reflected the predominance of the car with commercial development along N and NE 45th Street emphasizing parking lots and residences featuring attached or detached garages.

Discussion around “trackless trolley” (i.e. trolleys or busses propelled by an electric current in a wire run above the street) or motorized bus systems in Seattle began in earnest in the 1920s, particularly as the city’s municipal railway system had substantial debt.^{xxxviii} The primary consideration by the city was the reduced cost of construction of the trackless trolley versus laying streetcar tracks.^{xxxix} Conversations about transforming public transportation gained traction in the 1930s and trackless trolley and bus routes began to supplant the older street car lines. The Green Lake Line was replaced by buses in 1937, followed by the Wallingford Line in 1940, and the Meridian Line in 1941. The transition to electric or motorized buses was completed in 1941 when the last streetcar ran in the city.^{xl} The city was able to apply to the federal government for financial assistance, via a $10 million loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to implement their revised transportation program. The city removed streetcar tracks throughout the city and repaved streets between 1943 and 1944. The dominance of the automobile was reflected in particular in new commercial construction, with an emphasis on parking lots. A Safeway Store was constructed at 2205 N 45th Street in 1941 (demolished in 2005), adjacent the historic district, with an associated parking lot, reflecting the desire of customers to drive to the store.

In the midst of these transportation efforts, World War II raged abroad with a number of implications on the home front, including a housing shortage as the city’s population surged to support the defense industry. Between 1940 and 1950, Seattle’s population increased 27-percent, from approximately 368,000 to over 467,500.^{xli} The number of renters in the historic district continued to increase during the depression years. By 1940, 40-percent of the houses within the district were renter-occupied, up 7-percent from 1930. This increase aligns with the city-wide increases in renter tenancy. By 1940, over 55-percent of the city’s housing units were renter-occupied.^{xlii}

The automobile increasingly shaped the physical character of the commercial core along the south edge of the historic district and the surrounding Wallingford neighborhood in the post-WWII era. The commercial district began to increasingly cater to auto-oriented rather than pedestrian-oriented shopping and traffic. Wald’s Foodland opened at Wallingford Avenue N and N 45th Street in 1950 (renamed Food Giant in 1953) adjacent the historic district; the store’s main elevation was not only setback from the street further than adjacent commercial buildings to accommodate a parking lot but also a large rooftop sign to easily advertise to cars passing by. The status of N and NE 45th Street as an auto thoroughfare was cemented with the construction of the fast food hamburger stand Dick’s Drive-in—the first stand in an expanding local chain of restaurants—in

Few residential buildings were constructed in the neighborhood in the 1940s and 1950s and only 16 were built within the district in those decades. While some of this construction was single-family residences, many were multiple-family dwellings.

Wallingford at the Turning Point, 1956-1985

Land use, transportation, and population changes in the surrounding Wallingford and Seattle neighborhoods impacted the historic district in the 1950s, 60s, and 70s. Furthermore, the financial losses of Boeing, a prime industry in Seattle, in 1971 sent a ripple effect of population and income decline through the city, neighborhood and historic district.

Land use changes include City Council's adoption of a new city land use ordinance (Ordinance 86300) in 1957, repealing the 1923 ordinance. Key elements of this new ordinance—later codified under Title 26, Zoning Code, in the Seattle Municipal Code—were establishing requirements for off-street parking and reclassifying zones. The First and Second districts of the 1923 Zoning Ordinance were now “low density residential area” and “high density residential area.” Within those zoning categories, the historic district was rezoned primarily RS 5000 (single family residence high density zone) with portions along Meridian Avenue and the south side of N 46th Street backing up to the business district zoned RD 5000 (duplex residence high density zone). The northeast corner of Meridian Avenue N and N 46th Street, the north side of N 46th Street between Interlake Avenue N and Meridian Avenue N, the south side of N 46th Street between Interlake and Densmore Avenues N, were rezoned RM (multiple residence low density zone). Multiple family infill construction within the historic district occurred largely within the RM zoned areas. In addition to regulating use, height, size, location, and parking for buildings and structures, the new zoning ordinance also emphasized the importance of stable property values, stating, “The economic stability of land use areas and conservation of building values are promoted and protected thereby.”^{xliii} This reinforced the effects of ongoing exclusionary lending practices, and put into policy the exclusionary priority given to single family housing. Greater flexibility in property use was allowed for within the 1923 Zoning Ordinance, but severely limited with the 1957 Zoning Ordinance and associated Comprehensive Plan.

Continued transportation improvements affected the historic district and surrounding development. Plans for a Seattle Freeway (Interstate 5) began in 1951, with federal approval and funding occurring in October 1957. The right-of-way for the new freeway required the Washington State Highway Department to acquire a two-block swath of properties between 5th Avenue N and 7th Avenue N, abutting the eastern boundary of the historic district. The entire length of Interstate 5 through Seattle opened in 1965. Although this path abuts rather than bisects the district, the concrete highway restricted Wallingford's access to the University District, which had originally been a selling feature in the neighborhood's infancy. The ease of access to freeways, with Aurora Avenue/Highway 99 to the west and Interstate 5 to the east, made shopping outside of the neighborhood more agreeable to residents.

Residential construction remained minimal in the historic district during the post-war years with a handful of apartment buildings constructed. As the population declined in the area, the value of Wallingford's proximity to the University of Washington reemerged. As enrollment boomed at the university, first with veterans utilizing the benefits from the G.I. Bill and then their children, the campus faced a severe housing shortage. Developers and property managers looked to surrounding neighborhoods to house students. Many single-family houses in Wallingford's neighborhood were converted to duplexes.^{xliv} Property owners within the neighborhood pushed back against this effort, seeking to retain the single-family land use.

The natural gas plant on the northern shores of Lake Union—a key industry south of the district—closed in 1956. Although the closure of the plant eliminated the air pollution that had plagued the neighborhood, the contaminated site faced an uphill battle to redevelopment and it served as a parking lot for years. Other closures in the district and the surrounding neighborhood included Interlake School as an elementary school in 1972, Home of the Good Shepherd in 1973, and Lincoln High School in 1981. Interlake was sold as surplus in 1981 when Lincoln High School closed. The closure of these key institutions threatened to destabilize the neighborhood and district, but preservation and revitalization efforts turned many of these potential losses into gains for the district.

Proposals to turn the Home of the Good Shepherd (NRHP listed in 1978) site into a shopping center were defeated when the City of Seattle purchased the Home of the Good Shepherd property in 1976 and transferred the building to the Historic Seattle Preservation and Development Authority. The site west of the building was converted to a public park and playground, named Meridian Playground. Historic Seattle operates the building, the Good Shepherd Center, as a multi-purpose community center, housing non-profit organizations, schools, small businesses, and a senior center.

The City of Seattle agreed to purchase the former natural gas plant on Lake Union from the gas company in 1962 and began the decade long process of remediating the site to convert it into a public park. Landscape architecture firm Richard Haag Associates was hired to formulate the design and master plan for the site. Gas Works Park (NRHP listed in 2013) opened to the public in 1975 and remains a draw to the greater Wallingford neighborhood. The Interlake School (NRHP listed in 1983) was leased to a developer in 1982 who rehabilitated it and converted it to a mixed use building with retail, restaurant, and residential spaces. The Interlake School is now known as Wallingford Center.

In the 1990s, city planning introduced the urban village concept and a portion of the historic district was designated as an urban village (west of Sunnyside Avenue N, excluding the Good Shepherd Center and Meridian Playground). The Wallingford Neighborhood Plan (1994) noted rising real estate prices and property taxes for the neighborhood as it became an increasingly desirable place to live. The residential trends of the 1950s through 1970s were reversed by the 1990s after the key redevelopment projects were completed. High density residential construction has increased within the last two decades along the south and west edges of the historic district.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary encompasses the area shaped by the underlying plats and unique connection to three streetcar lines during the period of significance, and through the duration of most of the construction within the historic district. Development along and the role of bounding arterials physically distinguished the historic district from surrounding development
