Cultural Data

The house was built in ca. 1900 on a large corner lot at 46th and Stone Way, where Bizzarro Italian Café and Blue Star Pub & Café now stand. Its address was 1307 N. 46th, according to some sources, and 4512 Stone Way according to others. By the 1920s, Joe (Giuseppe) Mangini, who emigrated from Italy in about 1902, owned the house. Joe and his brother Jack (Giacomo) Mangini were principals in the Seattle Garbage Co., sometimes called Seattle Hauling Co. or Seattle Garbage and Hauling Co., which contracted with the City of Seattle for many years. In 1925, Joe applied for a city permit to excavate a basement at 1603 N. 48th Street, where he would later move the house. The owner recently spoke with Joe's great-grandnephew, John Mangini, who confirmed that Joe moved the house to clear the lot at 46th and Stone Way and redevelop it with a more lucrative mixed-use commercial and residential building – today's Blue Star building. Joe and his wife Mary then resided in the new building

St. Benedict Catholic School opened in 1908 with eight grades and 66 students. It was initially staffed by two sisters from the Edmonds Dominican Order who lived at Holy Angels Academy in Ballard and walked to and from school. The school's enrollment grew steadily. In 1924 increasing enrollment necessitated the construction of a new, larger school. At that time classes were moved out of the church and into the current school building. Interest in the school continued to grow as the Wallingford and Green Lake neighborhoods developed and enrollment peaked in the 1960s. In 1982, the Great Wallingford Wurst Fest started as a fundraiser for the school and continues to this day.
